OBITUARY

MAJOR GENERAL JOSEPH HOOKER. Major General Joseph Hooker died at Garden City, The General had been in his usual health until an hour before his death, and purposed going to New York to-day to attend to business matters. He gave a large dinner party at the Garden City Hotel on the 25th and seemed to be in the best of spirits and to onjoy social intercourse with his many friends fully as much as at any time of his life. His intelect was unclouded, and, but for his unfortunate lameness, he would have been as active as ever. He took his accustomed walk in the Park during the afternoon, and did not complain of feeling ill until about four o'clock, when he retired to his own spartments, on the second floor, and summoned his alet, Thomas Lawler, who assisted him to a reclining position upon a couch. After an hour he arose nd busied himself about his rooms until a quarter to six P. M., when his valet, hearing the General strugbreath, hastened to his side and assisted him to lie down upon his bed, at the same time ringing the bell for help. Mr. Nickerson, the hotel perintendent, hurried to the room. But when he arrived the General was dead.

Joseph Hooker was born at Hadley, Mass., in 1815. He was a descendant of Thomas Hooker, founder of the city of Hartford, and son of Joseph Hooker, of Enfield, Mass. He first attended a district school, and subsequently he entered Hopkins Academy. was a farmer, and had the reputation of being a kind hearted, honest man, but who had none of those qualities of mind which his son exhibited; his mother, however, was a woman of considerable intellect and energy. At an early age Joseph was sent to work on a farm, but always felt the utmost repugnance for that kind of labor, and when the opportunity was presented for his enwhen the opportunity was presented for his entrance to Hopkins Academy, near Hadley, he intimated to some of his playmates that he would never return to field work. While at the academy one of the teachers called the attention of a Mr. G. C. Kellogg to the lad's readiness and dash, insisting that Joseph had strong inclinations for a military career. Mr. Kellogg obtained for him an appointment as cadet at West Point, which institution he entered in 1833, much against the wishes of his parents. Among Hooker's classmates at the Military Academy were denerals Benham, Sedgwick, French, Arnold, Williams, Baics and Todd, who remained faithful to the limon during the rebellion, and Jubal A. Early, Braxton Bragg and W. W. Mackall, who became leaders of the Confederate forces. Hooker did not graduate with brilliancy, as his old patron had predicted, being the twenty-eighth on the list of his class, on June 32, 1837. On July 1, 1837, he was appointed second lieutenant of the First artillery, United States army. November 3, 1838, he was promoted to first lieutenant and served with his section until July, 1841, when he was selected to act as adjutant of the Military Academy, holding that position until the tollowing Getober, when he was made adjutant of his regiment, which position until the tollowing Getober, when he was made adjutant of his regiment, which position as the retained until 1846, when the Mexican was broke out, at which time he was ordered to join the forces on the Rio Grande and act as aid to General Harney. At the battles of Monterey, September 21, 22 and 23, 1846, young Hooker made himself conspicuous for gallantry, psecuring the brevet of captain, adving from Marcia 3, 1847. He went through the entire campaign, from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico. During the struggle at the National Bridge, June 11, 1847, he so distinguished himself as to gain the brevet of major for meritorious services, and his gallant conduct at Chapuitepee obtained for him another brevet, that of lieutenant colonel. He had the promot to Hopkins Academy, near Hadley, he intinated to some of his playmates that he would never with fifth, and was that contessedly a main instrument in placing in that body the lamented Baker, who was his bosom friend.

As soon as he heard of the attack on Fort Sumter he left his farm, started for the East and offered his services to the national government. He arrived in New York in May, 1861, at a time when the whole country was clamorous for war. A cur-ous incident is mentioned in connection with his application for appointment to the army on this occasion. He had made the usual formal application for a commission and had been refused. Partially disgusted, he determined to return again to California, but decided to first call at the White House and pay his respects to Mr. Lincoln. He was introduced, the rospects to Mr. Lincoln. He was introduced, the rospects to Mr. Lincoln. He was introduced to you as Captain Hooker. I am or was Lieutenant Colonel Hooker of the regular army. When this war began made the following remarks to the President:—

"Mr. President, I was introduced to you as Captain Hooker. I am or was Lieutenant Colonel Hooker of the regular army. When this war began I was at home in California, and hastened to make it tender of my services to the government: but my relation to General Scott or some other impediment stands in the way, and I see no chance of making my minitary knowledge and experience useful. I am about to geturn, but before going I was anxious to pay my respects to you, and to express my wish for your personal well-tre and for your success in putting down this internal rebeilion. And I want, while I am at it, to say one thing more: I was at Buil Run the other day, Mr. President, and it is no vanity or boasting in me to say that I am a better general than you, sir, had on that field."

Mr. Lincoln in relating the occurrence subsequently said:—"file eye was steady and clear, his manner not half so confident as his words and altogether he had the air of a man of sense and intelligence who thoroughly believed in himself, and who would at least try to make his words good. I was impressed with him and rising out of my chair walked up to him and putting my land on his shoulder said, "Colonel, not Lieutenant Colonel Hooker, stay. I have use for you and a regiment for you to command." In every position in which he has been put General Hooker has equalled the expectations which his self confidence excited. As a colonel, as a brigadier and as a major general he has done exceedingly well, and should he ever be called to c mmand the army I have no doubt he would acquit himself as gallantly as any man in the country."

He was made brigadier general of volunteers May 17, 1861, and assumed command of a brigade under General Dix_in the bepartment of Annapolis, and subsequently of a division, which was ordered to clear out all armed organizations in that part of Maryland lying between the Chesapeake and the Potomac. During the winter of 1861-2 he commanded several expeditions across the Fotoma by the President, who dated back his appointment to May 5, 1862.

When the Army of the Potomac was sent to the assistance of General Pope, the forces under General Hooker were among the first to join him. On August 27 he defeated Ewell's division of "Stonewall" Jackson's corps at Kettle Run, and on Friday, August 29, bore the brunt of the second tattle of Bull Hun. The next day he was also heavily engaged, and on September 1, at Chantilix, fought with the greatest gallantry, driving the enemy from the field with great loss. His conduct was so marked that, on the army being reorganized for the Maryiand campaign, he was placed in command of the First corps. After the battle of South Mountain, September 14, 1862, he again distinguished himself on the right of the grand army, driving the enemy up and over the stumbt of the ridge, although not before Hooker's corps had sustained a severe loss in killed and wounded. The next day he pursued the retreating foe, and on the lifth, by a recompossance, discovered the position of the enemy, and exposed it. On September 17 he fought at Antietam Creek and early in the day, even while his troops were the most hotily engaged, was badly wounded in the foot and was borne from the field. This unfortunately happened at a time when Hooker's corps was striking a blow that might have resulted in the entire destruction of the received upon him the commission of brigadier general of the regular army, rendered vacant by the death of time rat Mansfield, and dated from September 29, 1802. He was then assigned as The leader of the Fifth corps, including the regulars, and assumed command on November 12, 1862, General Burnside having been placed at the head of the Army of the Potomac. Two days after he was assigned to the command of the Centre Grand Division of the same, embracing two corps, and with them participated in the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862, covering the withdrawal on the 16th. On the 26th of January, 123, General Burnside of the Centre Grand Division of the same, by 5, 1862.

leading exponent of the low comedy characters in modern comedy and farce, and as a prolific and suc cessful dramatist. Mr. Ruckstone was born near London in 1802. It was intended by his parents to place him in the navy, but as he showed no taste for the sea he was articled, when a youth, in a solicitor's office. A travelling company, passing through Wokingham, being short of a Gabriel in "The Children in the Wood," young Buckstone was pressed into the service of the manager, and took the part at haif an hour's notice, schieving a decided success. This accidental venture led to his pursuit of the stage as a permanent calling. He engaged with a friend, who had become manager of the Haversham, Folkestone and Hastings theatres, and for three years had plenty of work and little pay as a principal actor in a travelling company. During this time he had the good fortune to neet with Edmund Kean, to whose valuable ensuccess. Young Buckstone's first introduction to the great actor of his age is thus told:-"When Edmund Kean was in the zenith of his popularity young Buckstone was at Hastings. One fine morning he ascended a beautiful spot overlooking, the sea called 'The Windmill Hill,' for the purpose called "The Windmill Hill," for the purpose of studying a part for the evening performance. While reposing on the grass he noticed, walking to and fro, a gentheman dressed in white tight pantaloons, Hessian boots and blue cost, with metal buttons, who sho was deeply intent on a book. The stranger alcoulder, exclaimed, What are you doing—studying" 'Yos, sir.' 'Are you up?' On hearing this technical phrase for being perfect the comedian closely regarded his questioner. A cable despatch from Berlin announces the death, vesterday, of General Podbielski, inspector general of artillery and quartermaster general during the Franco-German war. He will be best remembered in connection with the official despatches of the war, which it was his duty to telegraph from the imperial headquarters to Germany. His name at the time became almost a household word in the imperial headquarters to Germany. His hame at the time became almost a household word in the Vaterland. He was born on the 17th of October, 1814. In December, 1863, he was quartermaster on the staff of Fleid Marshal Von Wrangel, and in 1864 secompanied the army to Holstein during the war with Austria. Podbielski was quartermaster general of the Prussian army; was present at the battle of Koniggraetz, and on the 22d of July, with the Austrian Field Marshal Baron John, fixed the line of demarcation between the two armies. Afterward he took a prominent part in the organization of the army of the North German Confederation, besides sitting in the Bundesrath and Reichsrath. He assisted in concluding the military convention between Prussia and the other States of the North German Confederation and in the entire organization of the Prussian and North German armies, and to him is ascribed not a little of the success which the Prussian army secured in the French campaign. On the 20th of July, 1870, he was made quartermaster general of the German army, and as Count Von Moltke's first assistant took part in the battles of Gravelotte, Sedan, Mont Valerien and the beleaguering of Paris. After the war he was intrasted with the carrying out of important military arrangements and reforms. On the 31st of December, 1873, he was made inspector general of artillery, and on the 2d of September, 1873, general of cavalry.
